The fourth generation of the Ford F-Series is a line of pickup trucks and commercial trucks that were produced by Ford from October 1960 to August 1966. Sleeker and wider than its predecessor, the new F-Series introduced several firsts to the truck line. In Canada, the F-Series continued to be distributed by Mercury dealers as the M-Series.

Ford F-Series (fourth generation) - Wikipedia

Ford built an integrated pickup, aka unibody, back in the early 1960s. The integrated pickup made its debut in 1961 and would only stick around until 1963. In 1964, Ford switched back to the traditional separate cab/bed design known as body-on-frame. While short-lived, the integrated pickup is an interesting oddball in the 100 years of Ford trucks, and is visual proof that Honda wasn't the first company to do this.

Ford Engineers came up with the uni-body concept, where the cab and the bed are one body. Traditionally pickup trucks were made with two pieces that had a gap between the bed and the cab. This had never been done before and Ford engineers saw it as a way to save production cost. The uni-body ran from 1961 to 1963.

The 'wrongbed' bed was available as an alternative to the unibody style starting in late 1962. All 1961-1965 F100 4WD and all '61-'66 F250 4WD trucks had a wheelbase of 120", and since the Fridge-style 'wrongbed' was the only separate styleside pickup bed Ford had available to fit that wheelbase, starting in 1962, these trucks got the 'wrongbed' by default when a styleside bed was requested.

This generation ran from 1961-1963 and also marked the debut of unibody trucks, which merged the box and cab into one body. Ford discontinued the unibody design in 1964 after it fared poorly in the marketplace. From 1962 through 1964, Ford continued to use lettering in the grill then, revised the appearance of the grille for the F Series pickups.
