The term, "anti-Mormon" first appears in the historical record in 1833 by the Louisville Daily Herald in an article, "The Mormons and the Anti-Mormons" (the article was also the first known to label believers in the Book of Mormon as "Mormons"). In 1841, it was revealed that an Anti-Mormon Almanac would be published.

Anti-Mormonism - Wikipedia

The first dissertations on Mormons, published in the 1900s, had a naturalistic style that approached Mormon history from economic, psychological, and philosophical theories. While their position within Mormon studies is debated, Mormon apologetics have a tradition dating back to Parley P. Pratt 's response to an anti-Mormon book in 1838.

This concept, which came to be known as blood atonement, was a stock component of anti-Mormon rhetoric in the 19th century. While many of the exaggerated claims that appeared in the popular press and anti-Mormon literature are easily disproven, it is likely that in at least one instance, a few Latter-day Saints acted on this rhetoric.

Peace and Violence among 19th Century Latter-day Saints

The problem with a religion that started in the 1800's is that books and record-keeping were very much a thing by then, making it very easy for today's researchers to cast doubt on everything their Holy Book claims. This is why we have so much hard evidence pointing to Mormonism, South Park's favorite religion, as being one gigantic latter-day lie.
