If there is anybody left alive who doesn't know, the Grand Hotel Abyss was György Lukács's not particularly witty soubriquet for the home of the Frankfurt School. It appears in the preface he wrote to a 1962 edition of his 1916 study Theory of the Novel. Lukács had incautiously participated in the short-lived alternative government in his native Hungary in 1956, and been sternly re-educated for it with a grim year of exile in Romania.
