Artillery served as the catalyst, problem, and solution that led to operational depth. The tenets of operational depth that stand out are the requirement for rearward depth, synchronization for the penetration, and forward depth. Rearward depth required logistical preparation, communications, and tactical dispersion.

A depth charge is an anti-submarine warfare (ASW) weapon. It is intended to destroy a submarine by being dropped into the water nearby and detonating, subjecting the target to a powerful and destructive hydraulic shock. Most depth charges use high explosive charges and a fuze set to detonate the charge, typically at a specific depth.
