The V810 lets you know when the battery is low on power by chirps it doesnot give much warning a couple of chirps and then it shuts itself off. Sometimes it's unnerving during a conversation it just shuts off, but you get used to the warning chirps. We both would by it again when we need new phones. Is this review helpful?

You could probably use the Motorola Desktop Speakerphone attachment. Works pretty good on my v60i. Thing is, the v810 is slightly smaller than the v60i, which is small as it is. The v60p uses a larger battery and that phone seems bulky. Glad the v810 also has the "Smart Key" which goes back to the StarTAC days and is used on the v60 series phones.
