Slavery is shown to be a parasitic relationship between master and slave, invariably entailing the violent domination of a natively alienated, or socially dead, person. The phenomenon of slavery as an institution, the author argues, is a single process of recruitment, incorporation on the margin of society, and eventual manumission or death.

Patterson explains this seeming paradox through the concept of natal alienation and its offspring, social death. Masters asserted their domination by robbing slaves of "ties of birth in both ascending and descending generations," leaving them in a state of natal alienation.

Slavery and Social Death: A Comparative Study: Amazon.de ...

Orlando Patterson has argued that slavery is unique in its imposition of social death. Based on his comparative study of over 180 separate slave societies around the world, Patterson argues that a distinguishing characteristic of slavery as compared to other forms of forced labor is the social death of the slave.
