Narrative Mediation carries with it both a certain perspective and methodology. It is a specific model developed out of the tradition of Narrative Family Therapy and, as such, represents a uniquely therapeutic approach to mediation. It challenges the mediator to acknowledge and take on assumptions made by conflict parties in creating personal and societal-level stories, make them explicit, and ...

The Narrative Approach to Mediation

Most stories feature a core conflict built around one specific type of external conflict, but that doesn't mean that other types of conflict can't appear in individual scenes or sequences throughout your book. It's also not uncommon for secondary characters to have their own arcs that feature a separate type of conflict.

Breaking Down The Four Main Types of External Conflict ...

Conflict resolution skills are required for a wide range of positions across many job sectors. This requirement is based around the fact that conflict tends to reduce productivity and create a difficult work environment, leading to unwanted turnover in staff and reduced morale.

Narrative Mediation: An Exercise In Question Asking

This narrative gives us insight into Sara's character and shows us a very detailed account of an everyday activity in Sara's life. Reflect on your everyday activities: going to lunch, attending practice, shopping with a parent, cleaning your bedroom, etc. Select one activity and write about it on a specific day, with specific details in mind.
