ASD-STE100 Simplified Technical English is a controlled language developed in the early 1980s (as AECMA Simplified English) to help second-language speakers of English to unambiguously understand technical manuals written in English. It was initially applicable to commercial aviation. It then became a requirement for Defense projects, including land and sea vehicles.

Simplified Technical English - Wikipedia
The standard is defined in Specification ASD-STE100. This type of writing standard is also known as a controlled language because it restricts grammar, style and vocabulary to a subset of the English language. The main characteristics of the Simplified Technical English standard are: Simplified grammar and style rules.
